Intellectual Property for Roselle Plus

There are no conflicts of interest regarding intellectual property rights with any third party, as the product was developed through the innovative intellectual concept of the principal investigator. To date, no part of this research effort has been patented, nor has the product been trademarked. However, two related articles have been published in peer-reviewed journals.

Future Plans: During the commercialization phase, we plan to:

- a. Register the trademark to protect the product's brand identity.
- b. List the product with the National Agency for Food and Drug Administration and Control (NAFDAC) to ensure regulatory compliance.
- c. Patent any of the validated processes for production, characterization and quality control.

This will safeguard our intellectual property and facilitate the product's market entry.
